

Performance Commentary

Despite evidence of the trade war starting to hurt earnings in the most exposed sectors, global equities continued to move higher in July. The main reason is a continued decline in interest rates which make stocks look more attractive on a relative basis. This also helped SKAGEN Vekst, and the fund reached a new all-time-high in July.

Gazprom was once again a strong performer, as the market continues to gain confidence in the company's newfound focus on capital allocation. Applied Materials was another strong performer, as several memory companies announced an improved demand outlook. On the negative side, Novo Nordisk was hurt by continued political focus on the high cost of health care in the US.

The Danish facility service company ISS entered the portfolio in July. We expect the company's investments in technology along with focus on key clients and regions to help profitability going forward – something clearly not reflected in the current low valuation.

While we have seen an impressive start to the year, global equity markets still look attractively valued compared to the implied return of other asset classes. However, it is worth highlighting the increased dependence of low interest rates to support the current valuation.

The fund selects low-priced, high-quality companies in the Nordic region and from around the world.

The objective is to provide the best possible risk adjusted return.

The fund is suitable for those with at least a five year investment horizon.
