An eventful start to the year

Signs of lower inflation combined with China re-opening resulted in a strong start to the new year for global stock markets. As the quarter progressed, stubbornly high inflation and concerns over the health of the banking sector gradually changed the mood in the market. Despite these headwinds, most markets delivered a positive return for the first three months of the year. For Norway-based investors, the return was amplified by a significant weakening of the currency. SKAGEN Vekst benefitted from the same factors and delivered a return in-line with the overall market.

Contributors

The Danish pharma giant Novo Nordisk was once again the largest positive contributor to the fund's absolute return. The company delivered a solid earnings report for the fourth quarter, reflecting the very strong progress in its diabetes and obesity franchise. While analysts are catching on to the substantial opportunity in obesity, we still see the market significantly underestimating both the short and long-term earnings potential for Novo.

The Norwegian telecoms operator Telenor was another strong performer. Its fourth quarter earnings report was solid and provided support for the sustainability of the attractive dividend policy. The company also continued to realise synergies in its consolidated Asian operations, paving the way for a future exit from the region. Telenor is also rumoured to be in merger talks about the Danish operations. Even after strong performance, the stock remains attractively priced, and we see more upside ahead.

The weakest contributor in the first quarter was Norwegian wind energy holding company Bonheur. The company delivered solid results in its main business segments, but the share price has been under pressure since the second half of last year when both Norway and the UK proposed large tax increases for the energy sector. The proposals have yet to be finalised, so there continues to be heightened uncertainty around the tax framework going forward. The stock is very attractively priced, however, and we believe that once there is clarity around the new taxes, the market should be able to return its focus to the solid company fundamentals.

The global insurance company AIG also had a difficult start to the year. The stock was hit along with the broader financial industry on the back of concerns around US regional banks. The market is also placing more focus on margins in the insurance industry, as reinsurance rates are rumoured to be up strongly this year. We see the above headwinds as cyclical in nature. The company is on a clear path towards higher and more stable profitability. A full spin-off of its life insurance business will only accelerate this progress, while also providing financial flexibility to accelerate their current buy-back program.

Portfolio activity

We sold the remainder of our position in the Norwegian shipping company Golden Ocean in the quarter. Since we last added to the position during the pandemic, the stock has more than doubled while also paying a substantial dividend. We used the money to increase our position in the Danish facility services company ISS. The latest financial report showed continued progress on margin improvements as well as strong organic growth. Given its lower financial leverage combined with a more robust process around bidding for new contracts, we struggle to see why the stock should continue to trade at a large discount to its international peers.

We also added to the Korean bank KB Financial as the stock fell back on the general weakness in global banks. There is currently a massive disconnect between the structural profitability of the bank and the current valuation. We have seen the same situation in several other regions before. These discrepancies can last a lot longer than most people expect, but the trigger for revaluation is always higher direct shareholder return – particularly if done via buy-backs. We have been hard at work trying to pressure management to go down this path, with some early success. After the involvement of a local activist investor, the likelihood of improved capital allocation in KB Financial has increased significantly.

Finally, we sold our A-shares in the Danish pharma company Lundbeck in exchange for the more liquid B-shares to improve the overall liquidity of the fund.

Outlook

It is important to remember that the strong performance in stocks over the past decade has been very unevenly distributed. Even after the correction last year, quality growth stocks generally continue to trade at an elevated valuation, while more capital-intensive industries trade at more reasonable prices. We think the odds of sustainably higher inflation and higher interest rates have risen significantly over the past 18 months. While sanctions against Russia have increased the short-term pressure on commodities, we also see long-term second order effects through a reversal of the globalisation we have become accustomed to. We are therefore comfortable with our current exposure towards companies that do well in an environment with higher inflation and interest rates – such as financial and energy-related companies. We also see several emerging market stocks trading at very attractive levels following ten years of underperformance. This is particularly compelling as several Asian economies have not reaped the full benefits of China's reopening.
